

Veolia wins major €1 billion, 25-year drinking water services contract in Spain

Veolia announces that it has been selected as the winning bidder by The Metropolitan Council of Barcelona for the landmark €1 billion, 25-year tender for the management of essential drinking water services across eight municipalities in the Barcelona metropolitan area, serving more than 230,000 residents. This contract will consolidate the Group's long lasting presence and commitment to Spain which is set to become its third-largest market in the coming years.

At a time of growing pressure on water resources, climate resilience and household budgets, Veolia's winning offer combines deep local knowledge with global expertise and innovation to deliver the highest-quality, most resilient service at the most competitive price, as reflected in its top technical and economic evaluation.

"We are delighted with this outcome in Spain, a key country for Veolia and one where we have been present for 160 years. We will put the best of our global expertise, technology and innovation at the service of Barcelona and its communities, delivering best-in-class services and the best value for money. Our ability to combine innovation and operational efficiency will enable sustained investment in the quality and resilience of these essential services, strengthening water resilience and environmental security over the long term." said, Estelle Brachalinoff, CEO of Veolia.

Among the planned improvements are a new sensor system for detecting leaks in the network, the implementation of new digitized operations centers, the modernization of the meter stock and the installation of remote meter reading equipment and the electrification of the vehicle fleet, among others.

These actions, along with the rest included in the tender specifications, are essential for the service and indispensable to provide water security to these municipalities, especially after the episodes of severe drought that the region has experienced in recent years, so the company's commitment is to start the work immediately.

The proposed ranking of bids, announced yesterday by the AMB and at the recommendation of the Procurement Committee, following its plenary session, is a standard step in the procedure and precedes the final award of the service contract.
